There was a point when I was between flunking out of one college and flunking out of the next, when I took a class at a community college.

I was working, so it was a night class. There was a guy in my class who kept asking me out. He'd follow me to my car after class.

I told him to stop nicely. He didn't. I stopped going to class. I just handed in all my assignments to the teacher on the last day.

I beat myself up about how much I'd messed up, but in retrospect, this was probably the safest option I could have chosen.

So when I say that I believe safe spaces help people learn, that's what I mean. I literally could not learn.

ANd he hadn't DONE anything. He just followed me to my car, asking about me, asking when I was going out with him.

The last time I went to class, he told me I was going to have "one more chance" to say yes, and I didn't want to know what that meant.

So... people who don't believe in safe spaces, I suspect, have no fucking idea what an unsafe space looks like.

I firmly believe that kids should be challenged. I strongly think that everyone should have their worldview shaken.

But you don't need to make people fear for their lives, or hear that they're actually subhuman.

Because that made you feel safe. I'm sorry that this happened to you and happens to anyone.
