Suzan, these are answers you owe to the entire romance community. And I'm not the only one asking these questions.

This is not a personal disagreement that can be resolved behind closed doors with a handshake. It would be utter hubris on my part to think that I could personally sort out issues that impact an entire community.

I also don't trust your good faith at this point, and that's a sticking point. You laughingly claimed in your video that we were all lying about K-Matt, but you know that people were largely talking about her work at Borders, which you have never addressed.

You know that the issue was not her liking one tweet by African American women, but that's what you said in your video.

How do you expect me to have a conversation with someone who cannot admit facts because they are inconvenient?

And why are you offering to talk to me when you are blocking Black women who are saying the same things as me?

It doesn't look good.

I stand corrected; I thought I remembered that you had, but can't find the tweets. Sentiment remains the same if you replace with "ignored."
